YEAR PILLAR	MONTH PILLAR	DAY PILLAR
壬 Ren Yang Water	庚 Geng Yang Metal	壬 Ren Yang Water
申 Shen Monkey	戌 Xu Dog	午 Wu Horse
庚 Geng · 壬 Ren · 戊 Wu	戊 Wu · 辛 Xin · 丁 Ding	丁 Ding · 己 Ji

Your chart uses the Lichun year boundary. Your birth time is unknown, so the chart has no hour pillar and the day is your calendar date of birth.

SECTION 01

Your chart in brief

Your BaZi rests on three pillars, and the one that matters most is the day pillar: 壬 Ren (Yang Water) sits at the top of it as your Day Master. Ren is large, moving water, the kind that carries things along with it instead of sitting still in a basin. Under it stands 午 Wu (Horse), whose hidden stems 丁 Ding (Yin Fire) and 己 Ji (Yin Earth) bring Direct Wealth and Direct Officer into the foundation of the chart. Even in a Water person, the ground beneath the Day Master holds themes of steady material effort and of structure and responsibility.

The verdict on your Day Master is strong, and the reasons are specific. The season does not support it, since the month pillar 庚 Geng (Yang Metal) + 戌 Xu (Dog) belongs to Metal and Earth. But Ren has a root, and it has allies: the year pillar repeats 壬 Ren (Yang Water) as a Friend, with 申 Shen (Monkey) beneath it carrying 庚 Geng as Indirect Resource and a second Ren among its hidden stems. Resource energy surfaces again in the month pillar, where 庚 Geng stands as your Indirect Resource and 辛 Xin (Yin Metal) as Direct Resource. So there is plenty of Water and plenty of support for it.

This is why your favourable elements are Wood, Fire and Earth, while Metal and Water are unfavourable. A strong Day Master gains from outlets and from things to work on or against: Wood lets Water flow out into growth, Fire turns it toward results, and Earth gives it banks and shape. Metal and Water would only add more of what the chart already has in abundance.

In practice, the tendency is toward self-reliance, capacity and a good deal of inner drive, along with a risk of too much accumulation: ideas, information or caution that never find their way out. The chart does well when it is given direction, projects and commitments that channel the current. The month pillar also holds 戊 Wu (Yang Earth) as Seven Killings and 丁 Ding as Direct Wealth, pointing to pressure and reward that can sharpen you when you meet them deliberately.

The sections that follow look more closely at how these parts work together over time.

SECTION 02

The year 丁未 for you

The year 2027 arrives as 丁未 Ding Wei, and for your Day Master 壬 Ren (Yang Water) the two halves of this pillar speak in different tones. The stem, 丁 Ding (Yin Fire), is Direct Wealth. The branch 未 Wei carries Earth as its main qi, and that Earth is Direct Officer for you. So the year stem brings the language of resources, budgets and practical care, while the branch brings the language of structure, duty and expectation.

Start with the stem. Direct Wealth is the element your Day Master controls, in the opposite polarity. Water controls Fire, and because 丁 Ding is Yin where you are Yang, the control is orderly rather than forceful. Things you manage tend to respond without much resistance, which is why this god is associated with regular income, careful planning and the steady building of something useful. In 2027 this suggests that attention may keep turning toward concrete matters: how your work is organised, where your resources go, what you have committed to and what it asks of you in return. This is a tendency of the year, not a prediction of any particular event.

The branch adds a second layer. 未 Wei is Earth, and Earth controls Water, so its main qi, 己 Ji (Yin Earth), is Direct Officer for you. Because the polarities differ, this control is measured and accepted, closer to a framework you agree to live within than to pressure. In a year carrying this god, expectations from others, obligations at work or in the family, and your own sense of what is proper may all feel more present. Reputation and fairness tend to matter more than usual, and you may find yourself wanting to do things through the correct channels.

The branch also holds a hidden stem, 丁 Ding (Yin Fire), which is Direct Wealth again. This echoes the year stem, so the theme of resources and practical responsibility is reinforced from inside the branch as well as from above. The third hidden stem, 乙 Yi (Yin Wood), is Hurting Officer. It is the quieter voice in the pillar, and it offers a counterweight: a part of you that may question a rule, want a better way of doing something, or feel the urge to say what the structure leaves unsaid. In a year dominated by Direct Wealth and Direct Officer, this small presence can be a useful release valve, provided you use it with tact rather than defiance.

Your own chart shapes how all this lands. Your Day Master is judged strong: the criteria show that the season does not support it, but it has a root and it has allies. A strong Day Master has the resources to carry responsibility, so the pull of Wealth and Officer is more likely to feel like useful structure than like a weight. Effort that you put into consistent work tends to show tangible results, and you are well placed to take on duties with confidence rather than reluctance.

That said, a year in which both stem and branch point toward obligation can slowly crowd out your own interests. The practical advice follows from the facts. Because Direct Wealth rewards regularity, build habits that last: a savings routine, a clear plan for your work, agreed roles at home so that duties are shared deliberately instead of drifting onto you. Because Direct Officer values commitments kept, make promises you can realistically honour, since this year tends to bind you to whatever you take on. If you accept a responsibility, accept it knowing its edges.

The hidden Hurting Officer in 未 Wei deserves a small place in your planning too. Leave room for something that is yours alone, a project, a skill, a conversation that is not about duty. This is the part of the pillar that keeps order from turning into rigidity. The shadow side of Direct Officer is excessive caution and worry about being judged, and the shadow side of Direct Wealth is focusing so much on counting and checking that you forget why you were building anything. A little of that Yin Wood flexibility helps against both.

In short, 丁未 Ding Wei reads as a year of grounded, practical engagement. The stem and the hidden 丁 Ding both bring Direct Wealth, the main qi of the branch brings Direct Officer, and a small thread of Hurting Officer keeps your own voice alive. With a strong Day Master that has roots and allies, you can meet this with confidence: build structures that last, keep your word, and protect a corner of the year for what you want rather than only for what is expected of you.

SECTION 03

The year and your chart

The year 2027 arrives as 丁未 Ding Wei, a Yin Fire stem sitting on the Goat. Your chart is read from the Day Master, 壬 Ren (Yang Water), and this year touches your four-pillar structure in several places at once. Most of what follows is gentle. One thread is not, and it is worth separating the two early.

Start with the stem. Ding (Yin Fire) forms a stem combination (天干合) with Ren, and Ren appears twice in your chart: as the stem of your natal year pillar, and as your Day Master itself in the day pillar. So the year's stem reaches for both at once. In classical terms the Ding and Ren pair points toward Wood, but that transformation depends on the season and on branch support, and it is the rarer outcome. Far more often the two stems simply hold on to each other. For you, that can feel like a pull toward a person, a role or a commitment that shapes your choices over the year. Because the combination reaches your Day Master directly, it can be a year when your attention is drawn outward, toward an agreement or a bond, and you do a little less of your usual independent work. If the commitment suits you, it brings cooperation and ease. If it does not, you may notice a promise keeping you in place longer than you planned. The practical lesson is to choose your attachments knowingly rather than drifting into them.

Now the branches, where the year acts more concretely. The Goat (未 Wei) meets two branches in your chart, and the two meetings pull in opposite directions.

The warmer one is in your day pillar. Your day branch is the Horse (午 Wu), and Horse and Goat form a six harmony (六合), one of the closest pairings between two branches, each completing the other. Hidden in your Horse are 丁 Ding (Yin Fire), which is Direct Wealth, and 己 Ji (Yin Earth), which is Direct Officer. The day branch is the seat closest to you personally, so this harmony tends to show as warmth and goodwill in your nearer relationships and in how you carry yourself day to day. Agreements can be reached more easily, and help can arrive through personal connection rather than formal channels. There is a second side to any harmony: two branches that hold each other closely can become somewhat less active elsewhere, so enjoy the goodwill without letting it bind you to other people's plans. It is a fine year for reconciliation, joint efforts and deepening ties that already matter to you.

The more demanding meeting is in your month pillar. Your month branch is the Dog (戌 Xu), and Goat and Dog meet in two ways at once: a destruction (破) and a partial punishment (刑), the latter being part of the Ox, Dog, Goat group. The Ox is missing from your chart, so the set is incomplete, but if a later Luck Pillar or annual pillar supplies it, the theme grows louder for a while before settling again. For 2027 the pattern is a lighter version. Both branches are Earth, and your Dog holds 戊 Wu (Yang Earth), which is Seven Killings, 辛 Xin (Yin Metal), which is Direct Resource, and 丁 Ding (Yin Fire), which is Direct Wealth. The month pillar is the area of work, structure and the settings where you answer to others, so friction tends to gather there: duties that feel unevenly shared, rules that seem to press harder on you than on those around you, paperwork or permissions that take longer than planned. Destruction adds a quieter note on top, a slow wearing down in which an arrangement that worked needs repair, or an agreement is kept in letter but not quite in spirit. Nothing dramatic is implied. It is the kind of thing that is easy to miss until it has accumulated.

What helps is maintenance rather than confrontation. Keep records, read terms before agreeing, and renew arrangements before they wear thin. Raise concerns early and calmly, before they harden into grievances, and look for a practical compromise rather than winning a point. Finish what is already underway before adding more. Allow extra time for official matters, especially anything touching your work or standing in the month-pillar area of life.

The year pillar of your chart, the Monkey (申 Shen) with Ren on top, has no classical relation with the Goat, so 2027 acts on it through the elements instead. The Monkey is Metal, and the year brings Fire above and Earth below: the Fire controls Metal, while the Earth produces it. The pressure from above is balanced by support from below. The area of life linked with this pillar may feel tested and nourished at once. You might meet higher standards or closer scrutiny there, alongside practical backing to meet them. Skills can be sharpened under this kind of pressure. Because there is no clash, change here is moderate and tends to follow your own decisions rather than being forced on you. Treat feedback as a way to refine your work, use available help such as training, mentors or stable routines, and plan in stages instead of reacting to every request.

Taken together, the year has a clear shape. Your personal sphere, the day pillar, is supported, and your public or working sphere, the month pillar, carries friction. The stem combination links the two by drawing your attention toward a bond. A sensible use of 2027 is to lean on the goodwill you are offered, keep commitments in proportion, and give the month-pillar matters steady, patient attention instead of letting small frictions pile up.

These are tendencies and periods, not events. How favourable the Fire and Earth of this year are to you depends on your favourable and unfavourable elements, which are read elsewhere in the report. If Fire and Earth are unfavourable for your Day Master, enjoy the goodwill but keep new commitments modest and leave yourself room to recover.

SECTION 04

Your Luck Pillar in 2027

In 2027 you are in the middle of a ten-year stretch ruled by the Luck Pillar 丁未 Ding Wei, which runs from 2021 to 2031. The year itself is also a 丁未 Ding Wei year, so the annual pillar and your Luck Pillar are the same pillar. Whatever this decade is asking of you, 2027 repeats it twice over, and it is worth reading the year as a concentrated version of the decade rather than as a separate chapter.

The stem of this Luck Pillar, 丁 Ding, is Direct Wealth (正財) for your chart, and its element is Fire. Fire is listed as a favourable element for you, which changes the character of the whole period. Direct Wealth stands for the element your Day Master controls, arriving in the opposite polarity, and its emphasis falls on steady effort, order and results you can see and hold. In a decade like this you tend to grow more practical. Questions of budgets, property, long-term security and the shape of your daily responsibilities move closer to the centre of your attention, and the rhythm of life often becomes more measured than it was before 2021.

Because Fire is favourable for you, this tendency works in your support rather than against you. The reference reading for a favourable Direct Wealth pillar describes solid ground under your feet: effort turns into stable gains, and plans made during these years may hold for a long time. That does not promise any particular outcome. It describes a climate in which consistent work is more likely to be rewarded than scattered work, and in which patience tends to compound.

Since 2027 doubles the Luck Pillar, the same theme may feel louder this year. You may notice that decisions about structure keep returning: how a responsibility is divided at home or at work, whether an arrangement should be written down, whether a plan you have carried informally deserves a firmer form. This is a good period to formalise what already works. A clearer agreement, a better-organised savings habit, a more honest division of roles with people who depend on you or share your life are all in keeping with the energy of the pillar. Things that are loose tend to ask for definition, and Direct Wealth rewards the person who gives it calmly.

It also helps to remember that Direct Wealth carries a sense of obligation. As the decade has gone on, you may have taken on more responsibility for others, and 2027 can bring that into sharper focus. Treat this as part of the pillar's design rather than a burden imposed from outside. The favourable element suggests you have the footing to carry it, provided you pace yourself and do not mistake constant activity for steady progress. The strength of this pillar lies in rhythm and consistency, not in sudden effort.

A practical way to use the year is to look at what you started or committed to since 2021 and ask which of those things have proven themselves. Those are the ones to reinforce. What has not held up can be released without drama, since the pillar favours order over accumulation for its own sake. You are also past the midpoint of the decade, which makes 2027 a natural time to consolidate rather than to begin from nothing.

Read this as a tendency and not a forecast. A Luck Pillar sets the weather of a period; it does not decide what you do within it. The most reliable use of 2027 is to lean into what this pillar rewards: consistency, clear structure, and work that you can sustain.

SECTION 05

Month by month

February 2027 opens with 壬寅 Ren Yin from Lichun on 4 February, Yang Water over the Tiger, and it is the busiest month of the year for your chart. Its stem is a Friend and its branch an Eating God, so the tone is of a peer at your side and of ideas wanting to be made. The branch touches all three of your natal pillars. It clashes with the natal year pillar and forms a partial punishment with it, so something old or inherited, perhaps a family pattern or an early habit, is stirred and made visible. At the same time it has an arched harmony with the natal month pillar and a half three harmony with the natal day pillar, and together with the month pillar it makes a three harmony with the day pillar. The pull toward your own ground is stronger than the friction. Use the month to set direction. Write down two or three aims for the year and take one concrete step toward each, and let the stirred-up material show you what really needs attention.

March, from 6 March, brings 癸卯 Gui Mao: Yin Water over the Rabbit, with Rob Wealth on the stem and Hurting Officer on the branch. The Rabbit forms a six harmony with the natal month pillar, so the month fits easily with the way you meet the world day to day. Rob Wealth suggests sharing and competition around the same resources, and Hurting Officer sharpens your wish to speak freely and do things your own way. The branch also destroys the natal day pillar. A destruction is mild: it is a small erosion, a plan or understanding with someone close wearing thin, rather than a break. Work with others and take joint projects forward, but state your terms plainly and avoid forcing outcomes. Goodwill spent now tends to return.

From 5 April comes 甲辰 Jia Chen, Yang Wood over the Dragon, with Eating God on the stem and Seven Killings on the branch. Eating God favours steady creation and ease in expressing yourself. Seven Killings is pressure, a demanding challenge or a person who sets hard standards. It is the most mixed month so far. The Dragon forms an arched harmony with the natal year pillar, which supports you from the background. But it clashes with the natal month pillar, and because the two pillars are exact opposites it is also a pillar opposition. In practice this can mean abrupt changes in your routine, work rhythm or the way you present yourself. Give one larger project a clear structure of timeline, tasks and responsibilities, and avoid starting too many things merely because energy is high. Expect some practical groundwork and slow paperwork.

May, from 6 May, is 乙巳 Yi Si, Yin Wood over the Snake, with Hurting Officer on the stem and Indirect Wealth on the branch. Visibility is the theme: you want to show your work and people respond to charm and clear speech. The stem forms a stem combination with the natal month pillar, a bonding that draws you toward the people and surroundings of your daily life. The branch gives a six harmony with the natal year pillar and, in the same breath, a destruction and a partial punishment with it. So the month is friendly on the surface but carries a thread of old tension, probably around family, background or long-standing arrangements. Present a proposal or put yourself forward if you have prepared. Hurting Officer can make words sharper than intended, so keep a cool head in negotiations and leave others room to reply.

June, from 6 June, brings 丙午 Bing Wu, Yang Fire over the Horse, the hottest point of the year. Indirect Wealth stands on the stem and Direct Wealth on the branch, which points to practical opportunities, chances to earn through effort and to handle resources with care. The Horse forms a half three harmony with the natal month pillar, so the energy is warm and cooperative, and there is momentum to finish things you have been pushing. The branch also makes a self-punishment with the natal day pillar. This one is internal rather than external: you may be harder on yourself than anyone else is, repeating a thought or a worry. Use the momentum for agreements and joint work, but watch for overcommitment. When everything feels possible it is easy to promise too much. If Fire is unfavourable for you, keep your schedule light.

From 7 July the month is 丁未 Ding Wei, Yin Fire over the Goat, which repeats the pillar of the year itself. The stem is Direct Wealth and the branch Direct Officer, so the themes are steady returns for steady work, and responsibilities, structure and recognition. This is a busy month in the chart. The stem forms a stem combination with the natal year pillar and another with the natal day pillar, so two parts of your chart are drawn into the same current. The branch gives a six harmony with the natal day pillar, which supports your sense of self and your closest partnerships. But it also destroys and partially punishes the natal month pillar, which can show as friction in work routines or daily surroundings. Treat the month as a midpoint review. Look at what the year has brought so far, follow through on spring commitments and adjust plans that are not working. Avoid large new starts unless they clearly fit the year's direction.

August, from 8 August, is 戊申 Wu Shen, Yang Earth over the Monkey, with Seven Killings on the stem and Indirect Resource on the branch. No interaction with your natal pillars is recorded for this month, so it passes without special triggers from the chart, and the character of the pillars alone sets the mood. Seven Killings brings a brisk, demanding pressure that can sharpen focus, and Indirect Resource favours unconventional learning, side study and clever solutions. The energy turns from summer warmth toward clarity and harvest. Sort, organise and evaluate. Review contracts, cut what is no longer needed and sharpen skills. Test clever ideas before acting on them at scale, and keep your feelings in view, since a businesslike month can make you sound cooler than you intend.

From 8 September the month is 己酉 Ji You, Yin Earth over the Rooster, with Direct Officer on the stem and Direct Resource on the branch. This is a supportive pairing: recognition, order and a sense of being backed by teachers, mentors or institutions. The only interaction is a harm between the branch and the natal month pillar. A harm is subtle, a quiet strain or small disappointment rather than a clash, and it tends to appear in how you are seen at work or in your daily circle. Standards rise this month and details that slipped by earlier may draw attention. Polish rather than expand: finish, edit and present your work carefully. Take direct feedback for what helps and set the rest aside.

October, from 8 October, brings 庚戌 Geng Xu, Yang Metal over the Dog, with Indirect Resource on the stem and Seven Killings on the branch. The Dog forms a half three harmony with the natal day pillar, which links the month to your personal core and gives you some footing. Against that, it repeats the natal month pillar, a pillar repetition: the same pillar returns, so themes from your own month pillar come round again and ask to be handled consciously. Because Seven Killings sits on the branch, duties, rules and demanding people may press harder. Read terms before agreeing, keep records, and raise concerns calmly before they harden. Plan extra time for official or shared matters, and avoid digging in over principle when a small compromise would close the matter.

From 7 November the month is 辛亥 Xin Hai, Yin Metal over the Pig, with Direct Resource on the stem and Friend on the branch. Direct Resource is steady support and learning, and Friend is the company of equals, so the month feels calmer and more supportive than October. The one interaction is a harm between the branch and the natal year pillar, which can touch family or background in a minor way, a misunderstanding or an old sore spot rather than anything serious. The pace turns inward and reflective. Use it to plan, study and reconnect with people who matter to you. Listen more than you speak in meetings, and consider starting something that takes months to learn, while clearing from your schedule what drains you.

December, from 7 December, is 壬子 Ren Zi, Yang Water over the Rat, with Friend on the stem and Rob Wealth on the branch. The month repeats the Water of February's stem and again brings peers and shared resources into focus, with some competition around what is shared. The branch forms a half three harmony with the natal year pillar, tying the month to your roots and the long view. But it clashes with the natal day pillar, which touches your own sense of self and your closest relationships. A clash is movement: a change of plan, a restlessness, a conversation that cannot wait. Be precise in what you say and write, confirm arrangements twice and address small irritations early and kindly. The month suits planning, research and solitary work more than large negotiations.

The cycle closes from 6 January 2028 with 癸丑 Gui Chou, Yin Water over the Ox, with Rob Wealth on the stem and Direct Officer on the branch. The branch forms a partial punishment with the natal month pillar and a harm with the natal day pillar, so loose ends surface around work routines and close ties. Rob Wealth again raises questions of sharing, and Direct Officer asks for responsibility and order. Finish what you can, let go of what no longer fits and keep schedules flexible. Review the year honestly before the next one begins. Small concessions now save effort later, and quiet preparation for spring is more useful than forcing results in the last weeks of winter.

Taken together, the year starts with its strongest charge in February, with the biggest movement around the natal year pillar. It builds toward a busy midpoint in July, then eases through the clearer, quieter months of August and November, with October and December asking for patience around duties and close relationships. These are tendencies of the periods, not events, and your own choices decide how each month is used.

SECTION 06

The year in summary

The year 2027 arrives as 丁未 Ding Wei, and for your Day Master 壬 Ren (Yang Water) it reads as a grounded, practical year. The stem 丁 Ding is Direct Wealth, and the branch 未 Wei carries Direct Officer as its main qi. Resources, planning and commitments sit at the centre, with structure and expectation close behind. Because it repeats your current Luck Pillar, the same theme is felt twice over.

Your chart gives the year a few clear points of contact. Ding combines with Ren, and the Goat forms a six harmony with the Horse of your day pillar, so closeness and cooperation tend to grow around your most personal relationships. The Goat also meets the Dog of your month pillar in a destruction and a partial punishment. This is a mild strand of friction around duties, rules and fairness at work, best met with careful records and extra time for formal matters.

Your Day Master is strong. The season does not support it, but it has a root and it has allies. For that reason the pull of Wealth and Officer is more likely to feel like usable structure than like a burden, and steady effort has a good chance of showing results. Wood, Fire and Earth are your favourable elements, and Fire and Earth are exactly what this year supplies.

Across the months, February carries the strongest charge, stirring something old around your year pillar while supporting your own ground. The middle of the year, especially July, is a good moment to review what you have built and follow through. August and November are calmer and clearer. October and December ask for patience with obligations and with people close to you.

In practice, make fewer promises and keep the ones you make. Formalise what already works, such as roles, agreements and savings habits. Leave a small corner of the year for something that belongs only to you. These are tendencies of the year, not events, and your choices decide how it unfolds.

Notes

Your chart uses the Lichun year boundary. Your birth time is unknown, so the chart has no hour pillar and the day is your calendar date of birth.
